Tasmanian research on women lawyers

The Law Letter, newsletter of the Law Society of Tasmania, reports that the Women Lawyers Association of Tasmania has obtained a grant from the Law Foundation of Tasmania to research career paths of women lawyers in Tasmania. The research is aimed at tracking the careers of women law graduates over the last 25 years.

In light of a recent study in NSW identifying gender bias in the legal profession as a main reason why women are not represented in greater numbers at senior levels, this Tasmanian study hopes to "identify influences on the career paths of women lawyers in Tasmania and propose strategies to address any factors which may be identified as barriers".

Women who graduated from the University of Tasmania between 1970 and 1995 with law degrees and who are not currently practising are asked to contact Jane Goodluck, PO Box 676, Sandy Bay, Tasmania, tel 002 24 0553 with details of their address and date of graduation.

Children and the law – inquiry

The inquiry into children and the legal process currently being undertaken by the Australian Law Reform Commission and the Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission has produced an Issue Paper entitled Speaking for Ourselves. Children and the legal process.

The Commissions have supplied the Law Society with a copy and seek any comments and suggestions.

Public hearings and consultations will be held in capital cities and major centres during May and July. The intended date for Darwin is 17 July and for Alice Springs is 18 July.

Those interested are advised to check local newspapers closer to the date or to contact either Commission for verification.

A Ruff time in court

St John's College narrowly defeated Kormilda College on points in the first scoring round of the Inter-school Mock Trial Competition which took place on Wednesday 27 March at the Darwin Magistrates' Court.

Both teams put on a sterling performance before Mock Magistrate Elizabeth Morris as they argued the case of Steptoe & Son v Rufus Diamond.

The case was a dispute between two one-time mates over repayment of a loan and payment for a non-functioning stereo.

Kormilda argued for the plaintiff, one Fraser Henchman, a second-hand goods dealer played very shadily by Cherie Cooper.

Kormilda barristers Katie Burke and Tamara Johansen, (ably assisted by solicitor Luke Andrews) presented their own evidence with aplomb, but had the very difficult task of cross-examining the elusive Rufus (Ruff to his mates) Diamond.

Mr Diamond, owner of a Top End bar and self confessed Lee Kernaghan fan was played almost too well by Peter Walker of St John's College.

Troy Roberts and Richard Griffith were effective and hard-hitting defence barristers for St John's and worked well in their roles.

Mock Magistrate Morris decided the case for the plaintiff in the matter of payment for the non-functioning stereo
- caveat emptor, Ruff must pay up.

In the matter of the $10,000 loan she was persuaded that Ruff should have time to pay.

In Alice Springs the two teams from St Philip's College argued the same case with Mock Magistrate Murray Preston deciding for the plaintiff, whose case was argued by St Philip's Team 1.

The two St Philip's teams will continue to square off in the coming rounds.

Competition for who will face whom at the Grand Final on 6 June hots up as the teams now prepare to argue the second round on 27 April - a civil case involving a rather interesting tattoo.
