NATIONAL LANGUAGE POLICY

The Senate Standing Committee on Education and the Arts has published its Report on a National Language Policy (AGPS 1984).

The report covers such issues as library holdings in languages other than English and of materials for teaching English as a second language. It also includes library services for the disabled and library staffing and consultation.

Of the 117 recommendations in the report, 5 are specifically related to libraries:

Recommendation 107: The Commonwealth Government should consider providing additional funds to public libraries to increase their holdings of materials and services for minority linguistic groups, providing that the State Governments maintain their current efforts in this area. (paragraph 13.9)

Recommendation 108: State and public libraries and the State Government bodies responsible for adult migrant education should discuss the provision of materials and services for learners of English as a second language, with a view to determining, and providing, adequate library services. (paragraph 13.10)

Recommendation 109: The Commonwealth Government and State Governments should establish a comprehensive national program of library services for persons with communication handicaps. (paragraph 13.14)

Recommendation 110: State library bodies and public libraries should adopt the recommendations of the Standard for Multicultural Public Library Service concerning staff development and training. (paragraph 13.18)

Recommendation 111: Library authorities in all States and Territories should make provision for regular consultation with ethnic, Aboriginal and handicapped groups. (paragraph 13.19)

The recommendations will be of great assistance to the Public Library Funding Coordinating Group in their campaign for better funding for public libraries.

LandSearch takes off

An important new reference tool for those interested in the landscape industry is about to be introduced. Called LandSearch, it will be the first subject index to the periodical literature of landscape architecture, and will provide references to recently published articles from approximately 100 journals in the fields of landscape planning, design, construction, history and related disciplines. Coverage will be worldwide and will include the journals of major commercial publishers as well as those of professional institutes.

The index will be useful for those involved in landscape theory and research, landscape gardening and contracting, park planning and management, sportsground design and maintenance, interior landscape work, landscape management and science, and land rehabilitation and conservation.

LandSearch will be produced quarterly, with annual cumulations. The first issue will be available in April 1985. Details of subscription price, and of a special pre-publication discount offer, can be obtained from Datascape Information Pty Ltd, GPO Box 1870, Canberra, ACT 2601. North American readers can obtain pricing details from Datascape Information, PO Box 396, Cranford, NJ 07016 USA. A review will appear in InCite at a later date.
