Recent movements in the library and information sector

Macquarie University

Neil McLean will step aside as university librarian at Macquarie University with effect from 31 December 2001.

Neil is taking this step in order to devote more time to his position as director, IMS Australia (which will move to Macquarie University). It will also enable him to spend more time engaging in a range of national and international activities relating to the IT interoperability and collaboration agenda.

Penny Carnaby will continue as acting university librarian while the position is advertised.

Bond University

Gulcin Cribb has been appointed to the position of director, library services at Bond University. Gulcin was the manager of the Physical Sciences and Engineering Library Service at the University of Queensland prior to taking up her new appointment at Bond University. Gulcin has extensive experience in the areas of innovation, change management, information literacy, flexible learning, library-faculty-industry partnerships, marketing, multimedia, digitisation and virtual libraries. She was one of the original founders of AVEL (Australasian Virtual Engineering Library). Gulcin has published more than thirty articles and presented papers at conferences both in Australia and overseas.

Endeavor opens Australian office

Allowing libraries in Australia and New Zealand to take advantage of local support services for the Voyager integrated library management system, Endeavor Information Systems has opened an Australian Regional Office in Marrickville, NSW. The Australian office, located at 30–52 Smidmore Street, Marrickville, will also assist the growing number of libraries employing Endeavor's ENCompass, the integrated system for managing, searching and linking the diverse collections of academic and research libraries.

Claire Hill, a native of Brisbane, and most recently with Endeavor's European Regional Office in London, will serve as Australian support manager. 'I am personally very excited to be returning to Australia to work with our many Voyager libraries in both Australia and New Zealand,' Hill stated.

'Endeavor has made continual strides to fulfill the needs of international customers,' stated Jane Burke, Endeavor's president and CEO. 'Although located halfway around the world from Endeavor's headquarters in Chicago, the Voyager libraries in New Zealand and Australia play an active role on Endeavor's customer task forces that influence the development process for Endeavor's complete offering of library automation products.'

Endeavor also provides a 24-hour customer-secure website with library support information and offers many services to accommodate libraries internationally.

Gregor van Essen has been named director of international sales. Headquartered in London, Van Essen will manage Endeavor's European Regional Office and Australia Regional Office. He will co-ordinate work with libraries in Europe, Australia/New Zealand, South America, Africa and Asia for the Voyager integrated library management system and ENCompass digital system for managing, searching and linking collections.

Previously the Asia Pacific regional sales manager for Elsevier Science, Van Essen brings years of experience in working with academic and research libraries. Most recently, Van Essen managed a team of sales staff based in Singapore, Sydney and Delhi covering territories from India and Pakistan to Malaysia, Indonesia to Australia and New Zealand. ■
