Who's where

Recent movements in the library and information sector

Dynix welcomes Jim Wilson, one of the company's founding partners, as senior library advisor. In his new role, Wilson will work directly with prospective customers of the Horizon Information Management System, especially academic libraries, to help them adopt the latest technologies available to libraries today. He will also provide ongoing training to the Dynix sales team and advise the company's senior management team.

Wilson established Dynix in 1983 with Paul Sybrowsky and Keith Wilson and served as the company's first vice president of sales and marketing. While at Dynix, Wilson worked closely with libraries of all types and sizes in customising Dynix automation solutions to meet their particular needs. Since leaving the company in 2001, Wilson has worked as a library automation consultant and provided extensive training to libraries using Horizon and Dynix ILS.
